Update: Crystal of the Ancients is being re-vamped into a full on RPG that will focus on GBA games. The game is around 30% finished and will be released sometime next year. Additionally, if you have any suggestions, please feel free to post them in our forums! Update 2: Crystal of the Ancients will release as a PC, console and on an iPad by the end of the year! "Crystal of the Ancients is a story based RPG that sees you assuming the role of one of the ancient beings that have been awakening once again. As such it follows the story path of the last two game, however this time players take direct control of both the main character, and their mates. A couple of the most recent games features a party of 4, however we are adding the ability for you to control all eight ancient beings (that is twice as many as the previous games). The 8 ancient beings are each one to two pages long, and while each has their own unique abilities and traits, they can work as a single character for the party. They can be fully controlled with a skills menu, however for those who prefer to jump straight into battle you can jump into the game while one of them is controlling. Each ancient being has a unique main weapon that can be picked at the start of battle (which is either a blade, or a gun of various sorts), and once per battle a special attack that will be performed if the main weapon is used on an enemy. The majority of attacks will deal physical damage however there will be attacks where the special attack would be best used - for example an attack with fire would be best used in an enemy that is wearing heavy armour, while an attack with wind could be used if the enemy is weak to wind based attacks. Crystal of the Ancients features a full party change system that uses an envelope system. As battle progresses you will be presented with envelopes that can be used to upgrade your various stats, such as health, attack power, and defence. Hence, it is a true party based game, where all eight ancient beings are a part of the same party. Currently the game is very story based, however there is more content planned and I am currently planning to add a complete side story that will take place in a different location.

The game also supports up to eight players on the same device, though it is currently only possible in two player mode." Beautiful,

Fantasy Ground is a massively multi-player roleplaying game that allows hundreds of players to join thousands of other players in an infinite world. Fantasy

Ground is a third-person view game, set in a persistent non-cyber environment, and plays out in real-time. Your character exists in a real world, where you can walk around and engage in combat in the normal fashion. Everything you do is based on your actions in a virtual tabletop session. Key Features • ONE GAME FITS ALL: If you enjoy roleplaying, whether that be through pen and paper or on a computer with a keyboard and mouse, Fantasy Ground has something for you. The game system is completely different from other games, so you don't need to learn anything new to play. • WILDERNESS EXPLORATION: You can choose to adventure in a main world, where there are other players, or you can explore the infinite lands of Elsewhere, where there are no other players. In Elsewhere, you go from mission to mission, completing those missions in the order you find them, and there are no others to interact with. However, you can create your own missions, so you can set up custom scenarios that allow you to interact with other players' characters in a way that works for you. • ANYONE CAN PLAY: Fantasy Ground was designed to be played by ANYONE, so long as they prefer using a mouse for selecting items. Since the mouse is used for positioning your character, you can use your own mouse for positioning. We, your computer, have a mouse, so that you can use your own mouse, so that you can use a keyboard to make your commands. • AVAILABILITY: The game has an open source license, and you are welcome to use the game as you want. However, Fantasy Ground was designed to work best with a mouse, so I highly recommend learning to use the mouse with the same hand and device that you use your mouse. • PERMANENT VIRTUAL GAME TABLETS: Your character starts off with a mission, but what a mission, so it is possible to create your own campaigns. It comes with a mission, and the same for a mission. You don't need to play them to a conclusion, but you can assign areas that change the mission to investigate. This will help you to create your own campaigns that will be set up for you, allowing you to engage with other characters, where you wish, and how you wish. • REAL d41b202975

Secondly, we have added a couple of new content and fixed several bugs.The Nuffield Council on Bioethics has ruled that the Welsh Government should not request life-extending medical treatment for adults, after a survey found that people with incurable cancer would like to be informed of all options. The court decision effectively denies the Welsh Government's plans to change the law in Wales to offer the option of PAS for adults, unless the public is given a chance to vote on it first. A Welsh Assembly Government spokesperson said: "This case is closed. We will, as expected, now take our appeal to the Supreme Court of England and Wales and this decision is not part of that process." The council was considering its response to a government consultation, which received 16 responses and prompted 25 legal questions from the judges who heard the case. A YouGov survey commissioned by a group of patients' support organisations found that almost half of the 1,000 people who responded would be willing to have PAS and another 15% were "probably" prepared to have it. However, most people felt they would be given poor or no information about PAS if the law changed. "It's difficult to know whether the survey reflects an accurate picture of public opinion about the subject. It would be interesting to see how much public support there is for PAS as a treatment in the longer term, but this survey is largely about the answer to a very specific question," said Dr Peter Saunders, a solicitor and representative of a number of patient groups. What's new in Edge Of Elsewhere:

In the early to mid 1980s, there was an interesting musical phenomenon that the press at the time never really covered. It wasn't punk or spasticcore. It wasn't proto-goth; it didn't even have a debut album, and it didn't jump on whatever trend was popular at the time. It simply spewed out pure punked-out, no-fi, dissonant blasts of uncommon power. In 1987, after moving to New York in search of a career, Perry Lawson remembered this era with fondness. As Lawson's vision returns, a warped and ravishing new album is being prepared for its release in mid-November. First of all, an assessment of the context of this eight-track, thirty-minute blast of avant-punk between the years of 1983 and 1988. Then Lawson, the man behind Edge of Elsewhere (Octobre), will take you on an in-depth journey into the music, the band, and the time and place they emerged in. "Punk's supposed to be about joy – music about experimentation and creating within your means," Lawson notes of this daring act of cultural defiance. "Fucking punk is about getting off your ass and making it." Lawrence "Lawsuit" Jones was Lawson's original drummer, playing on every non-working Dead Farmers LP. Jones is soon replaced by Ian "Guto" Gunn, who moves into the notorious riffing, flailing Zak Kirk Coleman, a.k.a. "Zak", who was the key to Lawson's melodic prowess. "Zak was playing like he was pissed, just playing every riff he could possibly think of," Lawson tells Truthdig. "And that was what I like." Perhaps the most notorious of these "devil-may-care" bands may have been Zippered Flesh. On the local scene, ZF were known as "the violent Americans" due to their belligerent violence. The band was the quintessential punksploitation group, and fronted by Chris Boose, the son of Ed Quinn, of the legendary late-1960s proto-punk band Rollins Band (and the frontman's memory is marked by guitarist Greg Werner). After a titanic gig at town hall to a sold-out crowd, ZF
