Laser surgery is being utilized more frequently in the treatment of melanoma. Technological advances in lasers, including flash-pumped tunable dye lasers, carbon dioxide, neodymium: yttrium-aluminum-garnet (Nd:YAG) and pulsed dye lasers, have enabled the development of thinner skin incisions, greater tissue penetration, and treatment of thicker and more deeply located malignant neoplasms. There are two main groups of laser surgery: ablative and nonablative. Ablative lasers remove a substantial volume of tissue from the cutaneous malignancy; therefore, they are often used in the treatment of thicker lesions. Nonablative lasers generally penetrate the skin, but the precise volume of tissue removed is difficult to determine. They are used for superficial malignancies and act more as a coagulant than a resectioning agent. This article reviews the current uses of laser surgery in the treatment of melanoma, including the subgroups of ablative and nonablative lasers."""" Useage: 1. Create or import a PD_Tag model with: ```python from.pdt_tag_model import PD_Tag tag_model = PD_Tag() ``` 2. Create a tag to tag association table with: ```python tag_assoc_table = tag_model.TagAssociationTable() ``` 3. Add tags to your object: ```python # You have to use object type reference, # which is a reference to the object instance, # instead of just the id, like you would do in SQL: tag_assoc_table.add_tag_association(object_type=object_instance.object_type, object_id=object_instance.id,
