Q: Registering event handler in Page_Init or Create control in asp.net I am a newbie in asp.net. I need to register an event handler on a button in my Page_Init event. How can I do that? Can I do it in Page_Init? Thank you. A: You can do this in both OnInit and OnLoad in the Page directive. If you want to do it in OnInit you will have to do some work to get the control, otherwise it will be null.

protected void Page_Init(object sender, EventArgs e) {
    if(someStuffHere){ controlThatFires.someMethod(); } }
Then somewhere else in your Page you might have

And New Zealand is enjoying it. Banks has been among the world's best-performing markets this year, with both the New Zealand dollar and the country's benchmark bond return among the best-performing securities, at roughly 6 percent annual returns. The index has more than doubled this year. The foreign-bond rally is a reflection of economic strength. New Zealand's economy was the fastest-growing in the world last year, growing 4.9 percent, according to the International Monetary Fund. But the biggest beneficiary has been foreigners. Overseas investors poured a record $3.6 billion into the country's stock market last year, making it the country's biggest single foreign share investor. The biggest-ever single overseas bond purchase was $4 billion in 2006. The trend is unlikely to be reversed in 2008. Japan and Canada are the world's largest current-account surplus and deficit countries, respectively, and have given Bank of New Zealand Bank stocks in recent years on speculation that the United States might try to force them to tighten monetary policy by ending the dollars they receive on loans. Prospects for the U.S. to launch an economic stimulus package have also eased worries about the dollar' c6a93da74d
